FEATURED CASE

The Sahaf Family (A)

Author: Dr. Arif I. Rana

Area: Family Business

The case tracks the story of the Sahaf family over three generations. The narrative contains the vicissitudes of both the family and their business over the years. The basic issues relate to the shared dream and common vision within the family, inter-relationships of the family and the business, and managing change. This case can be taught in the introductory module of an elective on family business. It can be used to highlight:

a. How shared dreams/common vision, traditions, etc. within a family have an impact on business structure and growth, and vice versa — this impact can be positive and negative, and b. Issues in the progression from a sibling partnership to a cousin consortium.

Cases and notes written at the SDSB go through a double-blind peer review process before they are ready for use in the classroom. This case is available to faculty and can be obtained by sending an email request to shafqat.bhatti@lums.edu.pk

Gigawatt-hour Scale Savings on a Budget of Zero: Deep Reinforcement Learning based Optimal Control of Hot Water Systems.

Journal: Energy Journal.

Ranking: A (ABDC); 3 (ABS).

Authors: Hussain Kazmi (KU Leuven, Belgium). Dr. Fahad Mehmood (LUMS), Stefan Lodeweyckx (Enervalis solutions), Johan Driesen (KU Leuven, Belgium)

Abstract: “Energy consumption for hot water production is a major draw in high efficiency buildings. Optimizing this has typically been approached from a thermodynamics perspective, decoupled from occupant influence. Furthermore, optimisation usually presupposes existence of a detailed dynamics model for the hot water system. These assumptions lead to suboptimal energy efficiency in the real world. In this paper, we present a data driven, occupant centric methodology which optimises hot water production based on heating equipment characteristics learnt using only minimal sensor data. The proposed methodology is completely generalisable, and does not require an offline step to build a model for the hot water vessel or the heating element. Occupant preferences too are learnt on the fly in a reinforcement learning framework which optimally balances learning and control. As validation, the proposed system is applied to 32 real world houses in the Netherlands where it reduces energy consumption for hot water production by roughly 20%. Occupant comfort is measured using additional temperature sensors over three weeks and no negative impact has been observed. Given fairly loose requirements on sensor data and occupant preferences, this performance can be replicated on any domestic hot water system.”

Bank lending, deposits and risk taking in times of crisis: a panel analysis of Islamic and conventional banks

Journal: Emerging Markets Review (ABDC-A).

Authors: Mansor Ibrahim (INCEIF), Syed Aun R. Rizvi (LUMS).

Abstract: In this study, we conduct a panel analysis of Islamic and conventional banks in time of stress. Utilising a panel sample of 25 Islamic banks and 114 conventional banks from 10 dual-banking countries, we observe sustained financing supply by Islamic banks but significant reduction in the lending growth by conventional banks during the crisis period. While we find no clear evidence that deposit growth of Islamic banks behaves differently, there is no indication to suggest that Islamic banks exhibit excessive risk taking in times of stress.

RESEARCH SEMINAR ON THE IMPACT OF CPEC ON PAKISTAN'S INDUSTRIAL SECTOR – DR. M AMAN ULLAH (CHIEF ECONOMIST, P&D BOARD)

Abstract: CPEC, a part of China's greater initiative "One Belt-One Road", is approximately a 3,000-kilometre network of roads, pipelines and railways to transport goods from Gwadar port in Pakistan to Kashgar in the Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Region of China. The $46 billion project intends to rapidly modernise Pakistan's infrastructure, improve energy ecosystem and establish special economic zones. CPEC is not just a transit route for Chinese exports, rather entails an elaborate plan to overcome economic issues such as unemployment, the energy crisis, the underdevelopment of national infrastructure and the overall external economic dependency by building capacity in these sectors.

• What Enables Islamic Banks to Contribute in Global Financial Reintermediation?

Journal: Pacific Basin Finance Journal (Rank: ABDC 'A')

Authors: Bushra Naqvi - SDSB; S.K.A. Rizvi - Department of Finance, Lahore School of Economics; Hina Ahmed Uqaili – SDSB; S.M. Chaudhry - The Department of Finance, University of Birmingham, UK

Abstract: Conventional banks which once were competing with NBFIs and capital markets today face the new challenge of being substituted or reintermediated by Islamic banks. Earlier academic research has been debating over disintermediation and reintermediation of conventional banks, but consistently failed to address reintermediation through Islamic banks as a possibility. This study, however, fills the void by addressing the novel possibility of reintermediation within the banking sector and is the first attempt to analyse and compare Islamic and conventional banks from the perspective of reintermediated financial markets.

After identifying the reintermediation trends led by Islamic banks we investigate several bank specific financial and non-financial characteristics that might have enabled Islamic banks to emerge as an important player in reintermediated financial markets. By keeping our focus on slightly modified version of CAMELS framework where 'S' represents "Service Quality" we find that along with better capitalisation (C) and improved liquidity (L), better service quality (S) is another distinguished feature of Islamic banks linked with their high degree of intermediation.

CALL FOR PAPERS

International Conference on Creating Inclusive Organizational and Public Spaces
Venue: Lahore University of Management Sciences, Lahore
Dates: 30-31 March 2018

Availability, and accessibility of personal and public space represents one of the central concerns of these turbulent times. While an ideal public space should be open and accessible to individuals irrespective of their background or identity, in practice, public space almost always entails limitations and exclusions based on law, public policy and local norms. Similarly, with the increasing ubiquity of surveillance and social media in our lives, availability of personal space (material and ideologic) is increasingly becoming a contested domain.

Management plays a central role in maintaining the system of permissions and prohibitions that sustain the particular socially constructed nature of space in an organization or polity. For example, material and social management of space within organizations leads to unequal distribution of status and power; factors that in turn lead to suboptimal individual and organizational performance. Similarly, as the Black Lives Matter movement highlights, police officials are often responsible for extra surveillance and selective implementation of the law on different minorities hindering their presence in the public space.

Hence, organizational and social spaces are not neutral. Instead, while some modes of expression, identities and bodies are treated as normal – even ideal – others deemed deviant are either denied access or marked for surveillance and subsequent marginalization and invisibility. At the same time, management and policy can also play a critical role in creating more accessible and inclusive spaces in organizations and society. All this makes space as an important site of governance and management.

This inter-disciplinary conference aims to bring together scholars having different thematic, geographical and methodological expertise to engage with contemporary debates about the governance and management of space in contemporary organizations and polity.

Suggested streams can include, but are not limited to the following:

- Management of Organizational Spaces
- Governance of Public Space
- Gender and Space
- Diversity, Identity and Governance of Space
- Financial Inclusion
- Governance of Virtual Spaces
- Power, politics and Space
- Managing Urban and Environmental Spaces
- Democracy and Public Space
- Organizations as Public Spaces
- Public, Private and Hybrid Spaces
- Open Stream

We welcome both empirical and theoretical papers as well case studies that explore the main theme in interesting innovative ways. We especially encourage doctoral students, early career researchers, practitioners and policy makers to submit their work and participate in the conference.
